

The CubeSat, named Ex-Altia 1, will collect information on space weather with the help of a miniaturized version of a science instrument called a magnetometer, an essential tool for studying solar storms.

A good example is the Carrington Event in 1859 in which a solar flare and coronal mass ejection hit Earth causing the most extreme geomagnetic storm on record. The bright aurora was observed as far south as the Caribbean, and telegraph lines were seen sparking and lighting on fire.
