For the moment, the lithium-ion battery is at the heart of decarbonising transport. By the end of the decade, that may change. The battery is the most important, and expensive, component of an EV. But concerns persist over mining the raw materials needed to make them, whether they can deliver the performance and range needed to drive mass adoption and what to do with them at a?|

The manufacturing of lithium batteries via well-known brands is now extremely safe. Lithium battery fires generally occur due to a fault or damage occurring to the battery itself. This fault or damage will lead to an internal short circuit which triggers thermal runaway resulting in the battery bursting into flames.

Generally, lithium ion batteries are more reliable than older technologies such as nickel-cadmium (NiCd, pronounced "nicad") and don't suffer from a problem known as the "memory effect" (where nicad batteries appear to become harder to charge unless they're discharged fully first).

LiFePO4 batteries offer far greater cycle life, discharge power (depending on model) and are generally considered as a safer alternative to Lithium Ion cells. LiFePO4 battery composition is less susceptible to heat damage or catching fire, making it the preferred choice by the automotive industry in hybrid and electric vehicles.
