

Why do we need correctional reforms in South Africa?

A lot of reforms and improvements to the correctional system in South Africa are needed in order to ensure that offenders are able to enjoy their rights while also upholding their responsibilities to society by living in accordance to the norms, values and laws of society.

Is there too much time for pre-release programmes in South Africa?

The view of insufficient time for pre-release programmes is also echoed by Muntingh (2001), who noted that in South Africa, the tradition of offender reintegration services (that commence in prison and are continued in the post-release period) is missing.

Does South Africa have a rehabilitative approach?

It is evident from the foregoing discussion that despite South Africa's move from a punitive to a rehabilitative approach in dealing with crime, rehabilitation and reintegration programmes for prisoners are characterised by major flaws that render them ineffective.
