

Should the Venture Bros end?

Hammer: We came to a conclusion between the two of us years ago that ending the show is nothing we're interested in. The Venture Bros. lives on forever, and we knew that when it was time to end it that we would have to leave it open-ended. Because it's not done--this show should live on in the fans' heads.

The Venture Bros.: Radiant Is the Blood of the Baboon Heart (Official Discussion Megathread #2). So the fact that Malcom had 2% baboon DNA makes him not only completely different to Rusty, but technically a separate specie to humans altogether. I assume she got that from the benefit of her power being pure invisibility, and it's not

Honestly, second half season 4-all of 5. All of them are wonderful, and there's a different tone to each season so its really impossible for this to be a choice between "best" so much as "favorite", but I really love how creative they've continued to be with the series as it's progressed.

Considering how physically weak and usually inept the Monarch is, it was a good thing he had his Flying Cocoon, 3 different Monarch mobiles and his "Murderflies" unfortunately considering how bad he was however forces the argument that perhaps Sgt. Hatred was actually more powerful than the Monarch considering most of the Monarch's weaponry was

The power level of the Venture Bros always fascinated me. For the most part, there doesn't seem to be that many powerful beings or threats to society like Marvel/DC or other comics. We rarely see complete city level destruction. Most civilians we meet usually seem uninterested in the supervillain/superhero antics. It's more like an

There isn't really a show like the venture brothers, The venture bros have this strange line between staying grounded in reality while going off the deep end with super science and magic. Almost every person can be an anti-hero or villian at the same time.
